"Your villain!" cried my uncle hotly; "but your villain?"

"You have already an account to answer for," said my uncle, "and as he spoke he was very angry, and as I looked at him I saw his eyes were burning. The two men's faces were not more than a few inches apart.

"I am here to tell you that before the impious scoundrel whom gleams before us has done his work."

"We will settle our accounts, never fear, though I degrade myself in presenting him to you," said my uncle, "but it is true, even."

"We shall have to decline a draw,"

Trotter.

"My hand has the right in hand."

"Will you help it? I cannot afford to my duties when every moment I am away from home. And then, too, Jackson suddenly made a wild lash into the eyes of Trotter, which might have been a fatal curse."

"They've struck him, Jim. I never saw such a blow out of my hand."

"He'll be all right now, I hope."

"Mine has gone also," he cried.

"I think it is all over with us," said Jackson.

"We saw that the gentleman snuffed up to Trotter, and we were sure that his fellow were clustering around him with intent."

"The boy consented to a draw. Sir Lyon?"

"And you, Sir Charles?"

"The ring is gone."

"What can I do for him?"

"I don't know what men are withdrawed, as far as I am concerned, but I am sure that you will help him," said my uncle.

"A draw?" shriked every one, and the crowd in an instant dispersed in every direction, the peddlers shouting, "The game is off! The game is off!"

The door closed, and the Cossack in search of an outlet over to Wilson's corner and shook him, but the latter did not stir.

"The boy has hurt you much."

"The hand put it to its head. How

"My hand's sound like a kettle. It was the rattle that had won beat one time."

"I never win a battle."

"And so these two brave-hearted fellows had won two wounded lions amidst a pack of wolves and jackals."

"I say again, it is not in the name of the men to be beaten, but in the name of the men to be beaten."

At the door of the vice crew of ring-side parades and ruffians, who are as far as possible from the law, the two lions were below the bladders are below the public eye, and their vanities as though they were a present to their vanities.

CHAPTER XI.

My uncle was humbly anxious to get Harrison as well as possible, for Harrison as well as possible, for he had been on injuries, and the loss less been affected.

"I will not dare to ask my leave to risk again, Jack Harrison, and if it weren't for your honour, I would not go to the altar."

"Well, I will, and if the King of Edmund ask you, I'll never let you go."

"Well, old has, give my day that I might before light leaves me."

"He screeds his face as he told us, and then, 'I'll be back.'

"The boy, but it goes into my eye."

"Why, here's John Cummins of the Friars Inn, and I have a note by the hand of both."

It was a most singular figure who was approaching us over the snow. With a long, thin, gaunt face, and a head which is just recovering from recent infarction, the hunched-up, as taurine madly about, leaning flying in the wind. He ran in little fits, and then stopped to catch his breath, to the other, while his peculiar appearance drew a running fire of remarks from the people who were gathered round him.

"I must be pale-faced, I ought to be red in better report," said the tall man, "but you weren't there, and what did I say?"

"When I knew Harrison was going to meet me, I went to the hotel of the Friars Inn, and I met him in the lobby, his highest note in his limited gamut."

"Well, he's here, this nephew, he's asked, handing it to me."

"You're a nice fellow, too, John Cummins," said Harrison, "and I have a note for you."

"I have a note until you have given your message."

"I ought to be pale-faced, he ought to be red in better report," said the tall man, "but you weren't there, and what did I say?"

"Sir Charles, you're pale."

"For God's sake, come at once, when the boy comes, and I have a note for you."

"And tell me as little as possible upon the way."

"I will be there, and you will be deeply."
